| (1) What I saw was that the students in Taiwan was very good at speech. Their speeches influenced me so much. Thanks to that, I was able to challenge whatever, like speech, group discussion, and questions. |
| (2) I think my presentation was better than I expected, but I felt conflicted. I thought that my presentation should have a fun to make the people listen to my presentation. Then, I was able to make people listen my presentation. However, I thought I ran away to laugh. If my presentation didn't have a fun, did they listen to my presentation? I don't think so. So, I need a power to make people listen to my presentation, even if my presentation doesn't have a fun. |
| (3) I should study English harder. There are three reasons why I think this. First, I could not understand the class perfectly. This became obstacles that I asked questions. I wanted to ask more questions. My poor skills in English made regrets. Second, I was not able to become good friends with some people. I tried to have friendships with all of the people, for example I remembered the name of all of them and I made many chances to have conversations with them. However, I was not able to have good friendships with some people, because I was not able to have much in common to talk, and I could not understand what they said perfectly. So, I think that I should study English hard to understand what they say, and I should have knowledge of their backgrounds. Also, I had a quarrel with some people. That quarrel might be caused my poor skill in English. The skill perhaps leaded to misunderstandings between them and me. If I could say what I wanted to say really, I hadn't had the argue. |
| Also, I think that I owe what I am to what I was. I could do speech confidently, thanks to what I was. In my childhood, I often read valedictory messages in front of many people. This experience enabled me to do speech openly. This program allows me to know the roots of my personality. |
| (4) The main problem in the future is to be ruled the roost in conversation. When I talked with the people in other countries, they ruled the roost in our talk. It seems thankful that the people who can speak English fluently grab what I want to say and they rule the roost in our talk, but if I were a business person, I could not become a good sales man, or an international player. |
